ABOUT THE SCHOOL OF ARTS AND HUMANITIES

The arts and humanities are academic disciplines that study human culture, context and achievement. They span a huge range of subject areas and enormous timeframes, examining the many different ways in which humans have sought to understand and express themselves throughout history.

Subjects that fall within arts and humanities include languages (both ancient and modern), literature, philosophy, religious studies, history, anthropology, linguistics, history, theatre, art history and theory, classical studies, music, creative writing, psychology, sociology, cultural studies, visual culture (including film and television), women's studies, politics, international relations, development studies, archaeology, journalism, and media and communication, to name but a few.

At undergraduate level these subjects would be studied within the Bachelor of Arts, an extremely flexible course that allows you to study courses from different subject areas, if you wish, and build a degree that's unique to your interests, academic strengths and future career goals. Postgraduate study in these subjects can be undertaken within a traditional Master of Arts, a programme designed to strengthen, deepen and develop a student's knowledge in a subject – usually a subject that you have already studied to bachelor's level.
